PROGRAM HIGHLIGHTS

A Time-Honored Tradition

Long before the celebration of Christmas as we know it, Europeans of the late Middle Ages held special open-air winter markets, often known as Wintermärkte in German-speaking regions. The earliest forms of these markets, such as Vienna's late-13th-century Dezembermarkt, allowed townspeople to gather food and supplies for the coming winter. Over time, local artisans began selling their wares at market stalls and festive treats such as roasted nuts and gingerbread also became popular gifts for Christmas and New Year's Day. For more than 500 years, towns and cities across Germany, Austria, and beyond have continued this tradition by ringing in the Yuletide season with a lively Christkindlmärkt, or Christmas Market. Other now-familiar traditions, from Christmas trees to Advent calendars to carols such as "Silent Night" and "O Tannenbaum," come to life amid these clusters of small wooden booths decked in boughs of fresh pine and strings of sparkling lights.
